A digital video recorder – commonly referred to as just DVR – is a digital machine capable of recording and storing videos for later access and watching by consumers. While DVRs have moved towards cloud storage, earlier editions stored content on an internal hard drive. DVRs enable consumers, businesses, and organizations to record content like a favorite television show, press conference, or video surveillance. The successor to videocassette recorder (VCR) technology, the DVR eased consumers’ ability to record and watch content at their leisure and was a significant increase in content storage compared to a videotape. At the height of DVR usage, TiVo was a leading provider with 4.36 million subscribers in 2006. As streaming platforms arose in the years after, consumers shifted away from recording traditional broadcasts in favor of content readily available via streaming service. DVR featuresHow is a DVR used?Use casesBefore DVR DVR features Record television content to watch during consumer’s personal schedule Video player features like play, pause, rewind, and fast-forward Configuring recording for an entire series of one or multiple shows Simultaneous recording and watching on two different channels Space control by deleting content to make room for additional recordings How is a DVR used? A DVR is capable of recording, storing, and playing back content for consumers. Initially, DVRs were a separate physical unit from the TV monitor, cable box, or additional machines. As digital solutions ramped up in the 2000s, DVRs moved from being offered as separate units to being embedded in the consumer’s cable box or integrated service plan. With their remote, consumers can use a DVR to find scheduled content and record for later watching. Skipping Commercials Skipping commercials was never easier than with the development of the digital video recorder. While a consumer could manually fast forward through their VCR tape, DVR introduced automatic 30-second and 60-second skip options. With more control, watchers could maximize their time, skip the waiting game, and pick up where they left off. DVR vs. Streaming Services While a DVR can record a custom list of content available anytime, many consumers moved towards streaming services in the 2010s for a similar reason. Both enabled consumers to cut cables and save money on cable or satellite services. Streaming services offer high-quality content but lag compared to DVR in providing real-time access to broadcast content like local programming. While a user can access content as soon as the recording starts, most streaming services do not offer recently live content. For DVR and streaming, viewers can play, pause, and more on their own time. Use cases DVR for Consumers Since 2005, the dance competition television series Dancing with the Stars has been a hit for ABC. Airing at 8pm EST, preoccupied viewers chose between watching live or missing it entirely. With DVR, the individual or group could schedule the recording or the entire season and watch at the most convenient times. With the ability to record multiple shows or an entire series, viewers could watch multiple episodes in a row. In retrospect, this was a stepping stone to the binge-watching culture presented by streaming services. DVR for Business and Security Organizations require physical security of their assets, offices, and more. Video security – also known as closed-circuit television (CCTV) – has long been a primary method for protection and recording incidents. Like VCR before, DVR offers businesses and security personnel visibility into their physical security at any time. DVR features like searching by event, time, date, and camera to optimize personnel’s ability to review past footage. Before DVR Television came into global view during the first half of the 20th century and became even more accessible as the decades progressed. The 1970s produced the first step towards watching shows after they had aired: the videocassette recorder (VCR). VCRs were a top product and enabled the recording and storing of content for almost three decades. The launch of DVRs in 1999 made recording more content less expensive with higher video quality and consumer options for playing. Photo Courtesy: Bloomberg/Getty Images The quickest and easiest way to get help from Xfinity is to use the website’s Xfinity Assistant feature. To do so, log on to your Xfinity account and navigate to the Xfinity Assistant page. Once there, you can ask questions and receive troubleshooting help. You can also ask for more information regarding your account, including your billing, appointment and payment dates. Should Xfinity Assistant fail to resolve the issues that you’re having, it will connect you with an agent automatically. As an alternative, you may also seek help and assistance via the Xfinity Chat or the Xfinity Support pages.The Xfinity Assistant ToolXfinity Assistant provides virtual tech and account support and is available 24 hours a day, seven days a week. It’s designed to feel like more than just an automated assistant, and part of the way it does that is by accessing your account to offer more personalized solutions based on your provided information. Photo Courtesy: Smith Collection/Gado/Getty Images Once you’re logged on, the virtual assistant will prompt you to type in the issue(s) with your internet or cable that you want to resolve. For example, you may ask why your TV is not working, why your internet is slow or if there’s a service outage in your area. Xfinity Assistant will talk you through possible means of troubleshooting or may even do so for you. For instance, it can reboot your Gateway or X1 modem remotely to clear the cache. In addition to offering solutions to technical problems, you can ask questions about your bill or check your appointment. You can also use the tool to ask for your Wi-Fi password, reschedule an appointment or make a payment on your monthly internet bill.Chat and Support PagesMany technical problems and frequently asked questions can be resolved via the Assistant tool. If the issue persists and requires a more complex resolution, then the Xfinity Assistant will connect the customer to an agent. However, there are also resources for educating yourself on how to solve common problems. Photo Courtesy: Lucas Schifres/Getty Images The Xfinity website’s support page offers resources sorted by the category your issue falls under, including internet, TV and streaming, mobile, voice (for Xfinity’s landline phone service) and home (for smart home technology). Within these categories are links that take you to helpful articles and guides that may solve your problem. Support for billings and payment, account management or accessibility features are also available on the page. Additionally, the website’s chat page offers another way of getting answers and help. To use it, just type a question into the “Ask Me Anything” field. Answers are also sorted into categories that you can browse through. Support article links for various topics and subjects related to your Xfinity account are also available at the bottom of the chat page.X1 Voice Remote and My AppXfinity internet and TV bundle subscribers have another option for accessing tech support: the X1 Voice Remote. By activating the device and saying “Help,” you can bring up a menu on the remote where you can access articles and guides on subjects such as how to navigate the X1, setting up parental controls or changing your viewing preferences. After saying “Help,” you can also ask for what you need directly, such as your Wi-Fi password or login. Photo Courtesy: Cindy Ord/Getty Images Subscribers to Xfinity bundles that include Xfinity Mobile can download the Xfinity xFi and My Account apps to give themselves even more options for getting support. The xFi app gives users access to the same type of support for the X1 voice remote. Meanwhile, Xfinity My Account allows users to check billing statements, schedule payments, troubleshoot internet connections and reboot the Xfinity Gateway modem while on the go. MORE FROM QUESTIONSANSWERED.NET By Benjamin Aries i IT Stock Free/Polka Dot/Getty Images You can use your home wireless connection to stream shows and movies from the Internet onto your television. In order to add this feature, you must have a wireless DirectTV Cinema Connection Kit, also called a “CCK-W.” This kit contains a digital connection device, as well as an extra coaxial cable. Once you hook up the CCK-W box, you can use your DirecTV remote to complete the wireless connection. Connect the power adapter to the back of the DirecTV CCK-W device. Plug the other end of the adapter into a wall outlet. Locate the DECA device connected to your DVR. This device is a white box with a coaxial cable on both ends. Leave the box connected to the DVR, and disconnect the other coaxial cable from the DECA. If there is no DECA box, disconnect the coaxial cable from the “SATELLITE IN 1” port on your DVR. Connect the loose coaxial cable to the “Towards LNB” port on the CCK-W device. The loose cable is the same one that you previously disconnected from either the DECA box or the DVR. Locate the port marked “SAT Rcvr” on the CCK-W device. Unscrew the cap that covers this coaxial port. Connect one end of a new coaxial cable to the “SAT Rcvr” port on the CCK-W box. Screw the opposite end of the cable to the available port on the DECA device, or to the “SATELLITE IN 1” port on the DVR if no DECA device is present. Confirm that the “Power,” “Activity,” and “Coax Network” LED lights illuminate on the CCK-W device. Wait for the “Power LED” light to stop blinking before proceeding. Point the DVR remote control at the device, and select “Set Up Now” on the television display. Press “Select.” Press the up or down arrow keys on the remote to move through the list of wireless networks. Highlight the network that you want to use, and press “Select.” Press the arrow keys until you highlight “Continue,” and then press “Select” again. Enter the security key for your wireless network, if needed. Use the remote control number buttons to type the key. Highlight the “Continue” option, and press “Select” on the remote. Highlight “Connect Now” and press “Select” on the remote. Review the details of the wireless network. Highlight “Continue” and press the “Select” button. Choose “Done” and push “Select” to end the setup process.
